

4 Drugstore Skincare Products You Should NEVER Use, According To A Dermatologist

March 15, 2020 by HANNAH KERNS

Although picking out high quality skincare products at the drugstore is a great way to promote healthy skin on a budget, there are some dangerous ingredients you should steer clear of when shopping. Specifically, many ingredients that are commonly found in skincare products can do more harm than good.

Keep reading for the 4 drugstore skincare products you should never use, according to dermatologists!

Artificial Fragrance

Although a common added ingredient in drugstore skincare products, artificial fragrance should be avoided.

Cosmetic dermatologist Dr. Howard Sobel explains, "One of my least favorite ingredients is added fragrance, which is often used as an umbrella term for chemicals and irritants. I prefer my patients use fragrance-free products on their skin, especially products that are used around the eyes where the skin is very thin and sensitive."
